Design must be honest!

These four words spoken by Prof. Ferdinand Alexander Porsche get to the heart of his philosophy in which design is not simply decoration or superficial beautification, but rather the perfect symbiosis of form and function. This can only be achieved once the functionality of a product is fully captured.

When the studio was founded in 1972 in Zell am See, F. A. Porsche had already delivered the evidence of this philosophy: the design for the Porsche 911. An unembellished, timeless design that embodies the technical essence of the sports car like a perfectly tailored suit.

A passionate expression of motion – even when still. The fascination for puristic design still motivates Studio F. A. Porsche today. It permeates all the areas for which Studio F. A. Porsche designs objects in the 21st century: product, transport and space design.
